

one who came to know him well could fail to be attracted by the kindly and affectionate nature which made him delight to seek and win the confidence even of the shy children of Swiss chalets. He was a scholar and a poet, with a mind of great originality and power, born to lead and influence others, and a very faithful friend.

- Belloc, H. The path to Rome. 8vo, pp. xv, 448; ill.
London, Allen, 1902. 7/6 net

The path to Rome led the author across Switzerland, and the sublimity of the Alps exercised its rousing power on his mind more strongly than on most men, because he has a mind more responsive than is given to most of us. He can reproduce in words and in pictures the impressions made on him with a freshness and suggestiveness that places his book among works of literature proper. He can be humorous and light, but we quote from him when serious, to give what, being an extract, can give but a very imperfect idea of the quality of his writing:—[Looking at the distant Alps,] 'from the height of Weissenstein I saw, as it were, my religion. I mean, humility, the fear of death, the terror of height and of distance, the glory of God, the infinite potentiality of reception whence springs that divine thirst of the soul; my aspiration also towards completion, and my confidence in the dual destiny. For I know that we laughers have a gross cousinship with the most high, and it is this contrast and perpetual quarrel which feeds a spring of merriment in the soul of a sane man. Since I could now see such a wonder and it could work such things in my mind, therefore some day I should be a part of it. That is what I felt. This it is also which leads some men to climb mountain tops, but not me, for I am afraid of slipping down.' The illustrations, which include sketches of the Alps, are exceptionally delicate and charming, and for them alone the book is well worth having.

Chamonix & Montblanc. 36 plates. Lucerne, 'Illustrato Lucerne' [1903]. Fr. 2
Very good photographs. The same house publishes albums of views of other Swiss and Italian districts.

Daulia, Emile [ps.]. Au Pays des Pyrénées. 8vo, pp. iii, 314; plates.
Paris, Mendel [1903]. Fr. 10

This is the second volume of 'Alpes et Pyrénées,' the first being 'Le tour du Mont Blanc,' already in the Library of the Club. The Pyrenees are described from the point of view of the traveller, not of the climber. The writing is clear, original, amusing: the plates are excellent.

- Rhodes, O. P. A Pleasure-Book of Grindelwald. 8vo, pp. xvi, 235; ill. New York and London, Macmillan, 1903. 6/
 A pleasant book by a writer who is acquainted with the Oberland at all seasons of the year, and a practised climber. The mountains, valleys, summer and winter sports, are described in a simple, conversational style, and technical terms, such as 'couloir' and 'névé,' are explained in footnotes for the uninitiated. The rules and advice on climbing are sensible and cautious, and though elementary are not out of place in what is intended to be a book for the ignorant and the novice. A kindly, tolerant feeling is shown for all the elements of Switzerland's summer crowd. There are numerous good illustrations from photographs, and some have a truthful quality of tone which is not too common in process block printing.

Robertson, Rev. Alexander. Through the Dolomites. Second edition (revised). 8vo, pp. xvi, 255; map, ill. London, Allen, 1903. 7/6

This is a fair guide-book for the tourist on the route, Venice, Cortina, Toblach, Bozen, Feltre. It is written in the form of a description of a journey by the author. The route is only slightly digressed from, so that it is to be noted that this is not a guide to the Dolomites, but only to a selected part.

Ronniger, Karl. Försters Touristenführer in Wiens Umgebungen. Wegweiser bei Ausflügen im Wiener Walde, im österreichisch-steirischen Alpenlande und in der Wachau. 12. Aufl. 8vo, 5 parts, pp. 389; maps. Wien, Holder, 1903. M. 7.50

This guide-book is published in five cloth-bound parts placed in a case, the whole about the size of a volume of Murray's Switzerland. This is a most convenient form in which to have the work, as either single parts may be taken, or if the whole is required, it is not too large to carry in the pocket. The maps are by Freytag. Within the district covered there is abundance of minor mountaineering to be done, for even the Schneeberg is not a mountain to be trifled with in winter, as many people have found out to their cost too late. The various climbs to be made are detailed in this book. The maps are very clearly printed. The parts are:—Wiener Wald: Voralpenland u. Schiefergebirge: Semmering, Schneeberg, Alpengebiet zwischen Mürz u. Salza: Voralpen u. Alpen im Viertel ober d. Wiener Walde: Gesäuse, Wachau.

Maguire, T. Miller. Strategy and tactics in mountain ranges. 14 articles in The United Service Magazine, Clowes, London, nos 886-899. September, 1902-October, 1903

There is much interest from the time of Hannibal to the present day in the subject of mountain warfare, especially for Englishmen, who have conducted more hill campaigns than has any other nation. In the above articles Indian frontier campaigns and Napoleon's campaigns in and around the Alps and the Pyrenees are chiefly dealt with. The portions referring to the work of Lord Roberts in India were looked over by him before publication.

Meyer, Dr Hans. Ueber meine Ecuador-Reise. 8vo, pp. 527-530. In Zeits. d. Ges. f. Erdk. Berlin. No. 7, 1902

This is a short note, in which Dr Meyer thus refers to the resemblance between the glaciers of the equatorial Andes and of Central Africa:— 'The snow and ice of equatorial America is distinctly different from ordinary glacier and snowfield, and often quite peculiar; not only in inner structure, superficial forms, etc., such as nieve penitente, but also in the form and extent of the moraines. Though the glaciers of Ecuador differ considerably from those of Kilimandscharo, in many points they resemble them, as for instance in the nieve penitente and in the form of the moraines. Both in Ecuador and in Africa the glaciers are rapidly retreating. The Stübel Glacier on the N.W. of Chimborazo has retreated 400 m. from one of its recent end-moraines. But the most interesting point of resemblance is that there are remains of former glacier formation close to the more recent. Just as on Kilimandscharo and Kenia, so in Ecuador, there are end-moraines left by the glaciers of the last geological epoch, 700 m. or 800 m. lower than the more recent end-moraines.'

Various Items.

Alpine plaque designed by Herr H. Kautsch, a well-known artist in Vienna.

This being flat, 3 in. by 2 in., and weighing 5 oz., might be suitably used as a letter weight. On the face, in relief, is the figure of a climber turning half round to bid good-bye to the mountains, among the clouds over which rises a dim female figure, and the motto is 'Victoria denique victrix natura.' On the elegant obverse is an edelweiss with sprigs of olive and of oak, and with Baumbach's verse,

'Hört' es, ihr Berge, Euch ruf' ich's zu,
Ich bin glücklich, Juhu, juhu.'

The plaque would form a dainty and useful addition to a writing table. It is obtainable in a velvet-lined case from G. Hitl, D.u.Oe.A.-V., Schrobenuhausen, Germany, in bronze 9 M., silvered 12 M.; postage 50 Pfg.
